Annex II

Chairman's summary of the general debate

The Chairman began by thanking the High Commissioner and the Acting President of Tunisia, His Excellency M. Fouad Mebazaa, for their thoughtful and stimulating presentations. These had set the stage for the excellent discussions during the General Debate of the Executive Committee's 62nd Session. The Chairman had also been pleased to report on his recent trip to refugee camps, with a view to drawing the international community's attention to the ongoing plight of the Somali refugees.

The Acting President had stressed the importance of the Committee's collective commitment to the notion of protection, emphasizing the values of solidarity, cooperation, and burden sharing. And the High Commissioner had recalled that, as shown by events in Côte d'Ivoire, Libya and Somalia unfortunately, refugee emergencies were not a thing of the past. Not only had these emergencies stretched UNHCR's resources to the limit, but they had also placed extensive, and in some cases additional, burdens on host countries. In this regard, the High Commissioner had highlighted the continuing difficulties posed by protracted refugee situations, the importance of resettlement and local integration efforts, and the need for burden sharing. He had also called attention to the continuing threat to protection space caused by racism and xenophobia, attitudes which "diminish us all".

Complex emergencies also required UNHCR to enhance its response capacities. The High Commissioner had discussed internal reform efforts to strengthen UNHCR's organizational response to emergencies and improve accountability, financial and programme control and risk management. He had also stressed the importance of partnerships, of broadening the donor base and of more unrestricted, or flexibly earmarked, funding. Finally, he had called attention to the upcoming intergovernmental event in December that would commemorate the 60th and 50th anniversaries of the Refugee Convention and the Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness, respectively.

Delegations had contributed to the general debate in a positive and constructive manner. They applauded the work of the High Commissioner, thanking him for his leadership and his vision. Most speakers also commended the work of his dedicated staff, many of whom work in very dangerous and difficult circumstances, and they called upon UNHCR to further strengthen measures to ensure their safety and security.

Member States also recognized that UNHCR works in an increasingly complex environment. Trends such as climate change, natural disasters, food and water insecurity, as well as growing vulnerabilities and armed conflicts, stretch the humanitarian system.

Two of the most demanding situations that arose in 2011 - in North Africa and the Horn of Africa - received considerable attention. Many delegations praised the generosity and solidarity shown by neighbouring countries in hosting refugees. However, concerns were expressed about the burdens borne by these and other host countries, and the need for the entire international community to provide assistance and participate in burden sharing. Several speakers also praised UNHCR's activities regarding displaced persons from these regions and supported the Office's efforts to strengthen its overall emergency preparedness and response capacity.

While paying specific attention to these current emergencies, delegations also expressed concern about protracted refugee situations. All of these required the pursuit of durable solutions. Several speakers noted that voluntary repatriation in safety and dignity remained the preferred solution, but pointed out that it was important to address local conditions to ensure that returns were sustainable. Others stressed the importance of resettlement, especially where repatriation was not an option, and called upon States to increase the number of resettlement opportunities. In terms of local integration, several delegates expressed support for UNHCR's work to promote self-reliance among refugees. A few speakers also made reference to specific groups of refugees, encouraging UNHCR to pursue its efforts to assist urban refugees and its programmes to address gender-based violence. Many delegations also welcomed UNHCR's efforts on behalf of internally displaced persons, in cooperation with the Inter-Agency Standing Committee.

Delegates pointed out, however, that UNHCR could not undertake its primary mission of protection and the achievement of durable solutions on its own. Partnerships and coordination were necessary and important components of its activities. States called upon UNHCR to work closely with the Emergency Relief Coordinator and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and to continue or enhance partnerships with other humanitarian organizations such as the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the International Organization for Migration; development actors, including in the framework of the Transitional Solutions Initiative (TSI); the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement; non-governmental organizations; and, in some cases, regional bodies.

States also recognized that UNHCR had been enhancing its own effectiveness and efficiency through a number of reforms. They expressed support for its ongoing structural and management reforms; efforts to improve overall accountability; and its continued use of results-based management and the Global Needs Assessment. In particular they welcomed its efforts to analyze displacement patterns and gaps in the protection system; to improve financial, risk and performance management; to create an Independent Audit and Oversight Committee; and to establish a steering committee that would assist in the research project on the cost and impact of hosting refugees. Some delegations, while commending UNHCR's progress in addressing concerns of the Board of Auditors, indicated that they were looking forward to further results and called for UNHCR to fully implement the International Public Service Accounting Standards (IPSAS) in 2012.

Delegations also stressed the importance of funding for UNHCR, with several delegates strongly encouraging the Office to continue its efforts to broaden its donor base, including from the private sector. There were also calls for more unearmarked funding to enhance UNHCR's flexibility in dealing with underfunded programmes.

Many delegations spoke of measures being undertaken in their own countries to address issues relating to refugees and stateless persons. The Chairman commented that it had been gratifying to hear of continued cooperation with UNHCR and information about new policies and legislation devoted to improving the conditions of refugees or asylum procedures, and to assisting the stateless. Moreover, it was encouraging to learn of many meetings at the international or regional level being devoted to these issues. At the same time, it was clear from many interventions that host countries continued to make significant contributions and needed assistance to address the considerable burdens they faced in helping refugees within their borders.

Finally, most delegations expressed their strong support for UNHCR's efforts to commemorate the 60th anniversary of the 1951 Refugee Convention and the 50th anniversary of the Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness. There had been calls for States to ratify these Conventions, and it had been especially gratifying to hear from those delegations who had indicated that they planned to ratify - or had already ratified - the Conventions on Statelessness. Moreover, many delegations welcomed the upcoming intergovernmental event at the Ministerial level in December and noted that this would be an opportunity to pledge their support to displaced persons and to reaffirm the fundamental principles of these Conventions. In a year when the number of displaced persons had again increased, the Conventions had proved themselves to be just as relevant as they had been at their creation. The Executive Committee needed to use the opportunity provided by these commemorations to once again hear the voices of the refugees, and to send them a message of hope for the future. This sentiment had been eloquently echoed by UNHCR's Goodwill Ambassador, Ms. Angelina Jolie, in her remarks to the Committee.

In closing, the Chairman urged all delegations to sensitize their capitals to the importance of high-level participation in the commemorative event in December. He called for commitment to concrete action to better the lives of the refugees, displaced and stateless.
